Faculty Interest Document
Fall 2024

In our mentorship approach to graduate training, faculty members identify potential graduate students whose research interests are similar to their own. Because of this initial match, students often work with this faculty advisor throughout their graduate careers, though this is not required.

On the next page are the faculty members that may be considering new graduate students (NO indicates the faculty member will not be accepting students for the coming year).

In the online application system you will indicate your preferred mentor(s) by noting them from first to third. First is your most-preferred mentor. Your personal statement is also a good place to note potential mentors, especially if joint-mentorship is preferred.

You can learn about faculty members' research interests at https://psychology.missouri.edu/tenured-and-tenure-track-faculty
